Senegal River Cruise

SENEGAL

Cruise on the Bou el Mogdad

The story of the Bou el Mogdad tells of its mythical destiny full of surprises.

Built in Holland, the Bou el Mogdad ensured, between 1950 and 1970, the transport of goods and people between St. Louis and the entire Senegal River region, with stopovers at the French colonial outposts of Rosso, Richard Toll, Podor, Kaedi, Matam, Bakel, up to Kayes in Mali. The Bou el Mogdad was at this time a means of transport for mail, food, drinking water and raw materials for colonial trade, as road and rail transport were still non-existent. After this heyday, the ship increasingly lost its usefulness for commercial purposes and was abandoned for some years along the shores of St. Louis. In 1975 Georges Consol bought the Bou and relaunched it as a tourist ship, and in 1980 it started cruising between St. Louis and Podor, before leaving the Senegal River in 1982 following the construction of the Diama Dam. The Bou was later used for a series of cruises to Casamance, then to Sierra-Leone on the Kono River, Guinea Bissau and the Siné Saloum. In 2005, Jean-Jacques Bancal and several associates decided to return the boat to its homeland, so that the emotions of this mythical boat that has been plying the waters of the Senegal River since the post-war period can still be experienced today.
